

G. K. Chesterton identified a source deeper than the sense of entitlement to explain the anger of the rich at paying taxes: "The poor have sometimes objected to being governed badly; the rich have always objected to being governed at all."